For now though, if you're looking for an app that will improve the way you shoot then download Nikon's latest program at this link below... These include the new aspect ratio selector that allows users to set their camera up with 16:9, 4:3 or 1:1 ratios which are the most common ones used by filmmakers and photographers around the world. This new feature is perfect for people like myself who like to shoot with their 16:9 format on my DSLR's, then convert them to widescreen when editing the footage. It also adds face-priority AF mode for sharper portraits, and compatibility with the recently release Coolpix P900. One of the more handy features included in the update is the ability to zoom into your photos or videos on your camera's screen whilst taking them. You can now make sure you get everything you need in shot by zooming in by using a remote control. This helps the photographer to take more and better shots at their preferred focal length, and can be found by enabling the "Zoom/Remote Control" option in the Control Panel. The update also adds a colour filter to their files which can be used when editing your files after you've shot them to add a cool vintage look, or simply add some cool artistic features that you like. There are other options that can be found into Nikon Camera Control Pro such as its customisable buttons, the ability to add plenty of other functions to your camera via third party apps, and full control of zoom functions. As you can see, the update is packed full of great features that will improve your photography experience massively. If you're a Nikon camera user then definitely check out the new update today!
